TO AMMAN FOR PARDON

A delegation from East Jerusalem yesterday left for Amman to seek King Hussein's pardon for an Arab notable who is now being held in Amman for "political reasons." The group could not yet determine whether the detained man, Said

Dajjani, is being held in connection with an alleged Libyan plot to over-throw King Hussein. Mr. Dajjani, member of a prominent East Jerusalem family, was until a month ago manager of the Jordan Bank in Amman

On Sunday The Jerusalem Post reported that a Palestinian bank manager was arrested, together with an army officer, in connection with an anti-Hussein plot.

It was learned yesterday that the arrests were made following the transfer of a sum of money by Libya to finance the alleged plot. The authorities were informed of the transfer by Mahmoud el-Khalili, head of the Jordan Bank's Jebel Hussein branch in Amman — leading to the arrest of "Colonel Ma'arouf" and Mr. Dajjani.

The delegation, which is expected to remain in Amman for several days, comprises Anwar Nusseibeh, former Jordanian Defence Minister two members of Mr. Dajjani's family, Subhi Abdullah and Dr. Hisham Dajjani, and Abdul-Mo'ati el-Kotb, a Jerusalem notable.

Gahal will oppose Knesset reform bill

Labour expected to abandon them

Gahal yesterday decided for election to the House.

Gabal's parliamentary faction, convening together with the Gahal Executive, voted 14 to 10 against tying percentage.

Labour, which was very reluctant to push for these changes now despite the advantages to be derived from them, will certainly abandon the proposals now - at least till the Eighth Knesset.

Herut leader Menahem Begin tressed, before the Gahai vote, that the splinter factions did not hamper the parliamentary work of Gahal in any way. (Hence there was 10 reason to exclude them by raising the minimum percentage of votes they need to get in.) His close colleague, Haim Landau, said there were many ways of making parliamentary work more efficient — reforming committees, for example — but that increasing the size of the House by 30 per cent would be illogical.

Knesset endorses Shlomo Rosen as Peled's deputy

Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter The appointment of Shlomo Rosen as Deputy Minister of Absorption was made official yesterday when Absorption Minister Natan Peled announced the appointment of his Manam colleague in the Knesset yesterday. The Cabinet had approved the designation on Sunday.

The appointment of Mapam's Reuven Avzi as Deputy Speaker in Mr. Rosen's place has not yet been announced - partly because the Labour Mapam Alignment still has to take a formal decision, and partly because Gahal, along with Aguda, Poalei Aguda and the Free Centre have collected 30 signatures calling for a Knesset debate on Mr. Rosen's appointment.

Next week a pre-conference will be held in Helsinki to prepare the ground for the actual conference. The idea of including the Middle East issue was first broached by Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, and has now been adopted by Yugoslavia's ruler, Marshal Tito, who is pressing it with vigour. The major powers at the con-erence — and in particular the U.S.S.R. — are opposed to including the Middle East in the deliberations, and for this reason it will probably not come up. Represented at the conf conference will be all the nations of Europe as well as the U.S. and Canada. Marshal Tito is thought to have espoused the idea of raising the Middle East issue as a favour to President Sadat.

But the Soviets, who are anxious for the conference to succeed, are against bringing in any Issue which is likely to degenerate into fruitless argument between Eastern and Western states.

Israel was hoping that the Mid-dle East would not feature on the conference agenda - since its basic position is that the problems of the area must be solved by the states of the area themselves, not by outside intervention.

> Peirez said that a number of extremist groups had used the 1972 dection campaigns to advance anti-Jewish purposes. Foremost among these, he declared, was the American Party and its presidential candidate, John Schmitz, who received more than one million votes.

Peirez also pointed out that J.B. Stoner, a long-time anti-Jewish agitator, a former Ku Klux Klan organizer, and a Democratic candidate in Georgia, used blatant anti-black and anti-Jewish radio and television campaign appeals.

Peirez said that a hate campaign was insinuated into the election by right and left extremists against Henry Kissinger, based on his Jewishness and foreign birth. The right-wing hate press, he continued, published harsh denunciations of Kissinger, inaccurately describing him as "the son of a rabbi."

Elsewhere in the political spectrum, Peirez said, articles in such publications as "Ramparts" and "The Village Voice" referred to Kissinger's Jewishness in their denunciations of him, "The Village Voice" in particularly vicious terms.

A few weeks after the burial, Mr. Sasson, wishing to erect a tombstone over the grave, applied to the first appellant for permission. The sum of IL1,000 demanded by the first appellant in return for this permission was regarded as exorbitant by Mr. Sasson, who complained to the Chairman of the Council for Jewish Cemeteries in Jerusalem. Upon being informed by the latter that he could erect the tombstone without permission from the Hevra Kadisha, Mr. Sasson arranged for an artisan to build three rows of bricks covered by a marble slab, on which he intended having his mother's name and other particulars engraved. The purpose of protecting so sensitive a place as a cemetery and the feelings of those visiting there, against insults, desecration and indignity is, he tinued, what gives colour to the act which is the subject-matter of the offence. For this reason, he held, he refrained from expressing any opinion on the question of whether the act of destroying the tomb-stone would be deemed to be "trespass" in other circumstances where there might be cause for sympathizing with the Houra Radisha (such as, for example, in a case where a tombstone in a Jewish cemetery contains a cross). In other words, he would not like to state categorically that in no case would the Heura Kadisha have the right to exercise self-help without committing the offence of "trespass" fined in section 148.

RECORD REVIEWS

LOCAL REPRINTS

BACH: The Forty-Eight Preludes and Fugues of the Well-Tempered Clavier.

For Israelis, dependent for financial reasons on local reprints, there are only a few performances available. They include Wanda Landowska, harpsichord, (RCA). Only the Book I (the first 24) are on the market so far; the company has not yet decided if to con-tinue the reprint or whether to import the second part from abroad CBS has reprinted the first four of six records, with Glen Gould playing the work on the piano. I have been told that the other two records will be-come available during October.

Landowska, on her Pleyel harpsichord, performs with restraint and with idiosyncrasies of rhythm and registration which are part of her person-ality. Glen Gould gives very individual but always thought-provoking interpretations and his playing is beautiful, moving and convincing.

A complete recording of the "48" has been reprinted here by Hataklit of Haifa with Mal-colm Hamilton performing on a harpsichord of anonymous make. The six records are offer ed at the absolutely bargain, price of ILi0.95 per disc (Evedicated V 30606-11). An analytical study by Robert L. Tuster, of U.C.L.A., provides a great deal of information about the form and structures of the preludes and fugues.

Hamilton's performances are often organ-inspired in sound and his approach strikes me as a bit flashy and over-stressing the virtuoso side. His is a kind of American Bach in interpretation and attitude — a far cry from Landowska's 18th-century drawing room or Gould's intel-

Mr. Lederer said that Israel also had an excellent record with regard to accident prevention: "I don't remember when an El Al plane had a fatal accident." (The only fatalities during an El Al flight were due not to an accident but to the deliberate shooting down of its airliner by a Bulgarian fighter plane in 1954, with the death of 45 on board.) LANDING MOST RISKY

The greatest number of accidents, fully 40 per cent, occur during an airliner's approach to landing, he said. He expressed the hope that this would soon be brought down considerably by new instrumentation, such as permits automatic landing of the Boeing 747 jumbo. New instrumented landing systems are already available, known to the profession as VASI (Visual Approach Sight Instrumentation) and AM (Visual Approach Monitor). One crucial problem is that civil aviation is now growing at an annual rate of 10 to 15 per cent much faster than the construction of airfields, and this for two rea-

The scarcity of suitable airport areas outside cities.

International airports today require huge tracts of land, he pointed out. The new airport at Foulness, 65 km. outside London near the seashore, covers an extent of 10,000 acres (40,000 dunam). A possible solution would be to build more runways on existing airfields, but this means an added burden on Air Tower Control, which in some congested airports is even now acting on near-minimal safety standards in landing planes in rapid succession.

The difficulty in keeping airports to manageable size is that at present parallel runways must be a mile apart to safeguard planes against "wing-tip vortices" — the powerful air swirls created by the wing-tips of a landing aircraft which can wreck not only the plane behind but, if diverted by a cross-current, an aircraft several kilometres to the side.

VICTORY FOR BRANDT

BY going to the polls in the record proportion of 90 per cent, and by rejecting all ex-tremists, of the right as of the left, the West German electorate has shown that democracy is taking roots in the Federal Republic. By giving the coalition in power a working majority it has also put the stamp of approval on the leadership of Chancellor Brandt, and supported his foreign policy.

One might therefore compare Chancellor Brandt's victory to the recent presidential landslide in favour of President Nixon, In both cases the people voted for whom they considered to be the best man for the job, and in favour of a policy of global negotiations and the relaxation international tension. One might add that in the case of Mr. Brandt they also gave their votes to the man who had won the Nobel Peace Prize, and thereby brought international prestige in a field in which Germany has been most sadly lack-

These elections have therefore seen a remarkable change in the image of Chancellor Brandt in the eyes of his own people. From a somewhat disturbing personality, by his fight in Norwegian uniform against the German Nazis, his willingness to talk to the hated Pankow regime, he has become a sort of "father figure" not only for the youth, which supports him energetically, but also for a large sector of the adult electorate, almost an Adenauer of the Left. He is less authoritarian and more democratic than the "Old Man," but also more reassuring than his Christian Democrat opponent. Rainer Barzel. This change in the image of Willy Brandt underlines a significant change in the mentality of many German people. But unlike President Nixon, Willy Brandt has been able to make his own personal victory a success for his party. For the first time it has become the largest party in the Bundestag, with all the advantages this assures. Taking into consideration the fact that the Catholic Church had appealed to Germans to "Vote Christian" and that Germany, like the whole of Europe, has been suffering from inflation, this success is even more remarkable.

It is due, of course, to the image of "responsibility" the party has been able to create while in power, and to the fact that the young people are voting socialist — a fact which will make it possible for the Social Democrats to remain the majority party in the Federal Republic for a long time.

But even more it is due to the support the electorate is prepared to give to the government's Ostpolitik, a policy based on the acceptance of the created by the Second World War, and on an effort to bring the two Germanys closer together. By voting for Brandt, the Germans have ensured the continuation of a policy which has already reduced the miseries caused by the division of Germany into two states, and made possible the forthcoming conterence on the security of Europe and mutual reduction of forces on the continent. Like the Americans, the Germans have thus voted for the continuation of an international process which involves risks, but also gives rise to new hope. It also ensures the entry into the U.N. of the two German states some time next year.

The unexpected success of the FDP, which obtained eight per cent of the votes, is certainly due to a large extent to the personality of Walter Scheel who, as Foreign Minister, played a very important role in the formulation and application of the Ostpolitik. But it may also be due to the fact that quite a few people who favour this policy are nevertheless concerned that an over-large Socialist majority could push this party far to the left in social and economic matters.

One of the most important consequences of these elections is to give to the Brandt government a safe and stable majority. It will have no alibi if it persists in the weak attitude shown during the hijacking of a Lufthansa plane in the middle of the electoral campaign, in matters which concern not only the security of the Israelis but also the sovereignty of the Federal

Chancellor Brandt has said he would visit Israel this autumn, and now that he has been reelected there are good reasons to believe that this visit will take place early next year. We hope that by that time the firm attitude of the Federal Government in matters pertaining to Arab terrorism will enable us to receive him with all the warmth due to a dedicated fighter for freedom and a good friend of our country.

PUTTING HISTORY STRAIGHT

Sir, -- For me, The Jerusalem Post has the character of "history of record" for Palestine and Israel. For that reason, I would appreclate your columns to comment and correct observations made in the recent book, "O Jerusalem," by Collins and Lapierre. So many "histories" have been written - or are now being prepared for the 25th anniversary of the State - that it would be useful to have corrections made by those who can do so, that innocent or deliberate distortions may not go unchallenged.
On page 162 of "O Jeruselem."

there is an especially grave distortion, since it touches on Eliezer Kaplan, the first Finance Minister of the State of Israel, the 20th anniversary of whose death is now being marked. My relationship with Mr. Kaplan was unique. The U.J.A. could do nothing to violate the terms under which it functioned under American law. As he spoke, tears fell from Mrs. Meyerson. This s not hearsay. I was there. Then Mr. Morgenthau took the floor, He said he understood Mr. Rosenwald's point of view but could not possibly accept it. Jews of the world had not carried their work in Palestime to the point where it would all have to be abandoned for lack of means of defence. As far as he was concerned, this was a legitimate and reasonable use of U.J.A. funds.

mund Romberg or Victor Her-bert, he was hardly comparable with the king of the schmaltz genre, Franz Lehar. No one else could tug at the heartstrings or wring the last drop of polgnancy from the E-string with the as-surance of this master of the tear-ducts. Only the most arid sort of intellectual could remain unmoved by the "Arbour" duet, "Wie eine Rosenknospe," or "Bei jedem Walzerschritt," from "The Merry Widow," sung by Nicolai Gedda and Elisabeth Schwarzkopf. The only comparable works in the Palm-Court orchestra repertoire are "Fascination," "Diane" and "Charmaine," compositions

rattle of tea-cups and can only be enjoyed to the full in the films of such unregenerate Viennese directors as the great Billy

There is, however, a form of intellectual snobbery prevalent here which maintains that it is impossible to enjoy such light-weights as well, as, say, Vivaldi or Bach. When the late Billy Rose, composer of the immortal "It Happened in Monterrey," among other all-time favourites. came here for the opening of his Sculpture Garden, he was more or less ignored while his travelling companion, Isamu Noguchi, who laid out the terraces, was lionized. After all, you can't get much more recherché than a Japanese landscape designer. I refuse to believe that anyone who really loves music detests a good melody and only responds to mathematical patterns, though I hear many protesta-tions from my friends to that effect. Weli, among other things, Beethoven's Ninth is a rattling good tune.

England's new Poet Laureate, John Betjeman, has described a similar attitude to architecture and painting as "ghastly good taste." It is basically anti-art and, what's more, they do miss a lot, the poor dears.

When this sort of closed-shop mentality is applied to art criticism the results are unfortunate. On the one hand, the most outrageous examples of anti-art are acclaimed in terms which elevate them to the status of High Art: Lucy R. Lippard, the American critic, has reserved a place in her private pantheon for Robert Rauschenberg, who once cabled a reply to a request to paint a portrait, which read This is a portrait of Iris Clert if I say so.

On the other hand, most modern critics emphatically reject any work which has a narrative content. This is the main reason for

T IKE other connoisseurs of the almost complete eclipse of Lischmaltz, I was saddened to some of the greatest Victorian learn of the death last week of and Edwardian painters. Oddly Rudolf Friml, composer of 'Rose enough, earlier narrative painters gelo covered the Sistine Chapel with Old Testament stories and Raphael and Titian, among a host of others, depicted Greek and Roman legends, while the Dutch and Flemish masters turned out innumerable genre paint-

> I happen to be particularly fond, of Victorian painting and the content only enhances my enjoyment of them. This does not preclude my appreciation of, say, a late Rembrandt self-portrait or a Cezanne landscape. I dislike stagey and cliquey art in which the practitioners clearly enjoy themselves more than the audience and I can only say to Rauschenberg, as Lord Chesterfield said to Garter King of Arms - You foolish man, you do not even know your own foolish busi-

Some 19th-century painters, in the fashion of their time, were addicted to a rather cloying sentimentality, but no more so than Dickens, for instance. They suffered, too, from over-exposure which has turned some of them into a joke. But careful examination of their work will often show first-rate painting. After all, cliches were originally valid truths.

In a Tel Aviv print-shop I once found a reproduction of Yeames' "When Did You Last See Your Father" and promptly bought it, to the evident amusement of the owner. I added it to my personal treasure-trove which includes such gems as Poynter's "Faithful unto Death" (the Roman sentry who refused to leave his post in Pompeli), Maclise's The Death of Nelson," Frith's "Derby Day" — which earned Renoir's praise, Millais' "The Boyhood of Raielgh," Landseer's beautifully painted stag "The Monarch of the Glen," Holiday's "Dante and Beatrice," Wallis' The Death of Chatterton" and "Whistler's Mother." These often provoke guffaws from those too blind to look at them as paintings. Most of the originals are hidden away in museum cellars but they can be viewed on request, as I have done at the Tate and some provincial galleries. They repay careful study. A critic who can praise Rothko or De Stael without having seen Turner's "Norham Castle" is doing all three an injustice. There are plenty of historical precedents for believing that the 21st century will stand amazed at our stupidity. But the critics are capable of anything. Writing in "The Listener" in 1937, Herbert Read, one of the great opinion-makers of our times, said: "The supreme head of one of the great nations. makes a speech... entirely concerned with the nature and functions of art. We in this country who suffer from the supreme indifference of the state to all such questions may well feel that this is already something."

The occasion was Hitler's speech at the Haus der Deutschen Kunst the day before the openLUXURY APARTMENTS
